

JUBILEE BANQUET.

GEORGE WASHINGTON SOCIETY BLOW-OUT.

The Workers of the Republican Party held forth at a fashionable restaurant—Speeches by Gen. Rollins and Judge Treat—How the First President's Association Celebrate.

The centennial anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the United States was duly celebrated by the Washington Association of Los Angeles last night. The members of the association are: President, Walter H. Moore and R. J. Northam, Fred Smith, E. J. Jones, Theodore Savage, H. G. Rollins, Joe Manning, R. J. Carpenter, Ben Fehrmann, Joseph Watkins, Louis Seivke, George P. Mohr, Rudolph Miller, Dr. D. G. Macowman, James M. Meredith, Theodore Sumnerland, George R. Flinn, George A. Stilson, H. C. Register, Sutherland Linton, Ed Perry, Judge Clark, Sig. Morris, Col. E. B. Treat and W. G. Miller.

The president decided a few days ago to give a banquet in honor of the day, and last night the association met at 9:30 o'clock in the banquet room of the Maison Dorée, on First street, where a banquet such as has seldom been taken in this city, was set down by the boys. The president presided and a jolly time, during the various courses was indulged in. When the champagne was reached the toast master rose to his feet and stated that the following gentlemen had sent letters of regret, as they could not be present: Judge Carpenter, Charles A. Alexander, Gen. William Vandever, and the Governor of the State.

The first toast was "The Day We Celebrate, April 30, 1789," and was responded to by Gen. H. G. Rollins in the following language:

"The day we celebrate—the anniversary of the inauguration of the first President of the Republic—is an illustrious day in the calendar of time, and marks a new departure in the history of man. It witnessed the inauguration of a government upon the western continent unlike any the world had seen, and founded upon ideas and theories promulgated 15 years before the Declaration of Independence—ideas and theories broad in their conception and so liberal in their import that they have been the basis of the new Government, though the European powers considered it as coming from a feeble source and little account to be remembered only as the episode of a wayward and revolutionary people. Why should the Government established one hundred years ago today by the inauguration of George Washington have been considered otherwise by the then political powers of the world? Its great head bore no title name. He had no hereditary of royalty. The people who elected him President and established the new Government were not numbered in numbers—wealth only in unproductive lands, in an energy which conquered all obstacles, and devotion to principle which knew no shrinking in the face of opposition and no surrender to any earthly power. They seem to have been born for the heroic deed, and in the midst of the wilds of the new world a Government of the people, for the people, and by the people—a government of the people, and by the people—except to God and the governed; no superiority of one man over another; no authority except that delegated by the people to the representatives of the people. I've beyond and stated times, and no responsibility to any human power greater than that of the people who elected him President and established the new Government. Our fathers builded not better than they knew," but greater. Our ship of state went out upon an untried sea, and soon became the equal of any ship that sailed upon the nations. Our first great chief was pure-hearted and level-headed, and it is wise and proper that he be upon the pedestal of the Great Republic we should model and celebrate the centennial anniversary of his inauguration by speech and song and sentiment, with the stars and stripes, and hearts ever in unison with music of the mighty Union, with hands ever ready to protect and defend the waving ensign of the Republic, may we transmit to coming generations a free land and an undivided nation, and may the Stars and Stripes, designed by the basins of the blood of an hundred battlefields, protecting the humble cot of the laborer, as well as the costly palace of the millionaire, have unfolded for centuries for many coming centuries over a free and happy people, and a peaceful and prosperous country.

The next toast was "George Washington," which was to have been responded to by Judge Carpenter, but as that gentleman was not present, Col. Moore made a few appropriate remarks, and announced that the next on the list was "Our Army and Navy." He called on Judge E. B. Treat, who rose and said: "Mr. Chairman—'Our Army and Navy' is indeed a comprehensive theme.

If it were divided into two parts it would still embrace, first, the patriotism and gallantry, and second, the creative genius and power of 60,000,000 of people; for our army, though small in numbers, is a nucleus of only 35,000 trained soldiers, has a rallying force of 1,000,000 able-bodied, broad-shouldered, strong, and brave men, ready and anxious to spring from every quarter these United States to sustain and perpetuate our Government, maintain our honor and protect our glory—the flag of our country.

Our army is not as vast in its proportions or as old in years as that of the older nations of the earth, but it is not only the measure of its heroism, the brilliancy of its achievements or by that recognized criterion of merit in military operations—success.

For the victory which made possible the event we today celebrate was but the beginning of the history of an army not only triumphant in every war in which it has been engaged, but adding to the glory of its history by following the successful trail of a still greater victory—the immediate resumption of all the arts of peace.

And of our navy, that much-ridiculed, much-doubted, but forever-renowned in our Government, can we forget how often it has brought sunshine out of darkness, and brought hope to despair, and reflected glory upon American genius and American enterprise? Springing out of nothing but inventive genius and American enterprise, in less than three years it attained the magnitude of 600 vessels of war, and started all nations with wonder at its achievements and revolutionized the art of war upon the high seas and in the fortresses of the world.

Its most sad, and indeed its only yielding to defeat, has been the ruler of the hurricane and the waves, and it will rise to be the pride of the American Nation, bearing the Stars and Stripes in glory, revered and honored in every portion of the earth. Mr. Chairman, the history of American history will furnish no brighter deeds than those embodied in the records of the army and navy of the United States, whose first commander was George Washington, whose memory we are seeking to honor.

"The State of California" was to have been responded to by Charles A. Stilson, but that gentleman was not present and Judge Savage was called on. The Judge said that he is not a native of the State, but he has lived here almost ever since his infancy, and he did ample justice to the subject.

"The City of Los Angeles" was also responded to by Councilman Theodore Sumnerland, who called to his feet to respond to the toast "The Ladies." The Doctor soon demonstrated that he is thoroughly acquainted with the subject, and was frequently applauded.

A number of other toasts were drunk, and the association left the table at a late hour, well pleased with themselves and confident that they and their descendants will be able to "hold the country down" during the next hundred years.

HIS STORY.

How a Man Was Beaten by Livery Stable Employees.

Last night about 11:30 o'clock a couple of men who gave the names of Thomas Cassidy and Edward Carlin, both of them very much under the influence of liquor, and Cassidy looking as though he had been pretty roughly handled, called at the police station, and related a tale of woe. Cassidy said that he had hired a horse and buggy from the stable at No. 285 South Spring street yesterday afternoon, between 5 and 6 o'clock, for the purpose of visiting his sister, who lives some distance out in the country. He said that he put up $2 for the rig in advance, telling the livery man that he would be back by 11 o'clock. He returned as he said he would, accompanied by his friend Carlin, that he had driven the horse too hard, and demanded more money. He refused to pay it, when he was set upon, clubbed and threatened with a ducking, after which $5 was taken from his pocket. Cassidy said that a private policeman was at the gate of the stable, but did nothing to relieve him. Carlin corroborated the story. Capt. Harris listened to the complaint and told Cassidy to come this morning and swear out a complaint, which he said he would do.

An Ugly Fall.

Charles de Graw, an acrobat, while doing the flying trapeze act, yesterday afternoon, in the inclosure at the end of the Temple-street road, attempted to swing himself across a distance of 40 feet to another trapeze and there to be caught by another man, he fell three times, missing his hold, and the fourth time, while in the air, the thin cotton ropes broke, and he fell a distance of 10 feet. His left side and arms were considerably bruised, and he fainted. He was brought around all right. No bones were broken.

An Old Man's Sorrow.

(Buffalo Express.)

Gen. Franz Sigel did not become the great war leader that some of his more enthusiastic admirers expected him to be. But, beyond his real courage and ability as a commander, he secured to the Union cause a devotion of which can never be fully estimated. In standing contrast with the disheartening "All quiet on the Potomac" which was the narcotic murmur that attended McClellan's campaign, the "I fight mit Sigel," became a stirring trumpet call which inspired the hapless Teutonic volunteer with a fervor that carried him triumphantly over many a bloody field, and sustained him through dust and heat, rain and swamp.

This name should now be dishonored by the General's son, and that the old man, bowed with years and woe, should resign his pension office, not with smirched integrity, but feeling that he has been a business failure, is pitiful in the extreme. It will be strange if the German veterans who once had Sigel's name so often on their lips do not rally and solace his stricken latter years with kind words and kinder deeds.

THAT GLASS EYE.

A San Francisco Masher and a Married Woman.

He came down from San Francisco a few days ago and took up his quarters at one of the first-class hotels. He is not exactly a masher, but since his arrival he has been given that title, and the chances are that it will stick to him as long as he lives. He had no particular business in Los Angeles, and for that reason he spent a great deal of his time on the streets.

The other afternoon he walked up and down Spring street, between First and Temple streets, about a dozen times, and at almost every turn he met a well-known society woman. After the second or third meeting the lady's nose took a shoot up in the air and even a blind man could see that something was amiss. The young man did not seem to notice her, and the chances are that he never would have known that such a person lived had not a well-dressed gentleman stopped up and tapped him on the shoulder late in the afternoon, when the following conversation took place:

Well-dressed gentleman: Sir, I wish to speak to you. That lady standing over there is my wife, and she tells me that you have kept your eye on her in a most impudent manner all afternoon. Now, sir, what do you mean by such base conduct?

Insulted lady: I never saw the lady before in my life, to the best of my knowledge and belief. She is mistaken, sir, for I don't know her.

W-d. G.: We will see about that. Come here, my dear. Is this the man who insulted you?

Insulted lady: Yes; he has insulted me every time I passed him this afternoon. He has kept his left eye on me in a most impudent manner all afternoon, and if you don't throw him within an inch of his life, you shall never call me my wife again.

W-d. G.: There, you wretch, what have you to say to that?

W-d. G.: Nothing, only that my left eye is blind, and I cannot see you, and prove what I say I will take it out for the lady's benefit.

Quicker than a flash the masher hooked his glass eye out and was about to pass it to the lady, but she was too slow to a street car and didn't open her mouth until she reached home.

The masher looked up and down the street, and as he turned on his heel and walked slowly away he was heard to speculate: "That is about the five hundredth time that my glass eye has saved me a good sound thrashing. That woman will never forgive me, but then I did not feel like accommodating her, for I think her husband would make a hard fight."

HE TOOK THE WRONG MEDICINE.

Robert Stewart of Petaluma recently had a queer experience. He writes:

"Carbuncles and boils afflicted my face and neck for weeks. Finally I bought a bottle of one of the leading sanitariums. To my surprise it made me worse. This made me lose faith in sanitariums, but seeing a statement that Joy's Vegetable Sanitarium dried up boils and cured skin diseases, I bought a bottle. The effect was astonishing. The carbuncles and boils began to dry up, and in two weeks my face was as smooth as ever. My brother also took a bottle with the same result."

ROBERT STEWART, "Petaluma, Cal."

Explanatory Note.—The mineral iodine of which the basis of nearly all other sanitariums, attacks the blood directly, hence forces impurities through the skin, creating more boils and pimples. Joy's Vegetable Sanitarium acts oppositely. It vegetable alkalies stimulate the various secretory organs and thus eliminate all impurities through the natural channels, hence dries up pimples & skin eruptions. The above testimonial is a case in point.

A DAILY REMINDER OF NOTABLE EVENTS PAST.

The Deacon Francois de Paris—John Dryden—Pope Plus V.—The Duke of Wellington—Joseph Addison: "The Spectator."

The 1st of May suggests one of the most curious episodes in the annals of superstition.

THE DEACON FRANCOIS DE PARIS is conspicuous not on account of anything done during his life, but for what occurred after his death May 1st, 1737. His tomb in the cemetery of St. Medard came to be regarded with much veneration among the populace of Paris, who had conceived any sympathy for the Jansenist schism, with which the Deacon was allied. By 1731 his tomb was the daily resort of multitudes for whom it was a good place for their extra devotions. Soon it was rumored that miraculous cures took place at the tomb among such as were diseased. Scores of people afflicted with rheumatism, sciatica, contractions of the limbs, epilepsy and neuralgia, went away professing to have been suddenly and entirely cured in consequence of their devotions at the shrine of this quasi-Protestant saint. The Jesuits were so fully incredulous of the cures went on and all the parish was aroused. In the autumn of 1731 the movement took a new form. The votaries when laid on the Deacon's tomb began to experience strange, convulsive movements and dreadful pains, but always ending in cure. Some of them would suddenly shoot up several feet in the air, as though by some explosive force from below; others would display extraordinary powers of eloquence or knowledge beyond the scope of their faculties, along with powers of endurance which seemed above what belonged to human nature. The scenes daily presented by the convulsionnaires in the cemetery became so great a scandal that the opponents of the Jansenists secured a royal decree closing the St. Medard except for the ordinary business of receiving the bodies of the dead. But this order shifted the scene of the alleged miracles; it was found that a few parties of earth from the tomb of Paris sufficed to produce the usual phenomena. For years these assemblages of people continued, in which persons under the Deacon's influence could sustain enormous weights and undergo tortures from which human beings usually shrink. A man named Montgomerie spent years in collecting the evidence of these miracles, which was published in three large volumes. Few facts of history are so well evidenced as the convulsionnaire phenomena. All that science can now say on this subject is that the alleged facts are impossible, therefore, the evidence goes for nothing.

JOHN DRYDEN, POET. Next to Milton, the best known of the English poets, is John Dryden, who died May 1, 1700. He was born in 1631, and after leaving Cambridge University, became secretary to his relative, Sir Gilbert Finkelstein, one of Cromwell's Council. He composed some heroic stanzas in honor of Cromwell after his death, and on the accession of Charles II. congratulated the new King in two poems composed for the occasion. Dryden was a royalist, and his comedies and tragedies are now forgotten, but his "Alexander's Feast" retains its hold upon the public; it was declared by Dryden himself to be the finest lyric in the English or any other language, in which opinion posterity has agreed with the author. His translation of Virgil is the most popular version of the Roman poet that has ever been published.

POPE PLUS V., who was born near Alessandria, Italy, in 1564, was raised to the Papal throne in 1566. He instituted a bitter persecution against the Protestants, and issued a bull in which he announced such extreme claims for the Papal supremacy, that its publication was forbidden by the Emperor of Germany and the Kings of France and Spain. He was one of the allies, whose forces, under Don John of Austria, won the great naval victory over the Turks in 1571. At his death, May 1st, 1572, he was succeeded by Gregory XIII.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON. He studied at Eton and a military academy at France, entering the army as an ensign in 1787. By 1793, he had become a lieutenant-colonel, and in 1796 was sent to India as a colonel, where he gained great distinction. In 1808 he was raised to the rank of lieutenant-general, and given the command of the army in Spain, where he gained great renown by the skill with which he held in check the superior French army, led by some of Napoleon's ablest marshals. But it was by the victory of Waterloo and the final overthrow that Wellington was to gain the place he occupies in history. The Duke was made Prime Minister of England in 1828. He was a Tory in politics and extremely conservative. He died September 14th, 1852.

JOSEPH ADDISON—"THE SPECTATOR." Today reminds us of "The Spectator," the collected papers of which are so popular as literary gifts at the present time. The author of these pleasing trifles, Joseph Addison, was born in Wiltshire, England, May 1, 1673. His first poetical attempt was a complimentary poem addressed to Dryden, who was much gratified by the praise of the young student. Intended for the clerical profession, Addison preferred a political and literary career, held many important offices under the Whig ministry. He died June 19, 1719. Of his numerous writings, the papers published in the Spectator are now the most read.
